Our Program for November:

Duane Erdman:
The Genus Restrepia

Restrepia, abbreviated Rstp. in horticultural trade, is a small genus of 49 orchids in the orchid family Orchidaceae, closely related to Pleurothallis. Named in honor of Don Jose Restrepo, it tends to be more showy than most other Pleurothallids. They are found primarily at higher altitudes in the cool, damp montane forests of the Andes and Venezuela, with some into Central America up to southern Mexico.

On Tuesday, November 3rd, Duane Erdmann will take us behind the scenes to see just how easy it can be for growers of all setups to add a Restrepia or two to their collections. He will also share thoughts on the taxonomy and classification efforts to date. Having more than 30 different identified and a dozen more unknowns in his collection, he has had the opportunity to study and photograph them. Duane has also traveled to Ecuador to see them in situ, which adds conviction and depth to his talk. Join us with an open mind and a desire to expand your collection.

Mounting Orchids

When considering mounting orchids, one of the most important things to do is to make sure that you have all the materials you will need ready and prepared. Count the number of orchids you wish to mount and then prepare enough materials to accommodate them by size and type. Once you have selected your mounting material soak it overnight in water and also soak about a handful of Sphagnum moss per plant.

In order to assist in removing your plants from the pots, soak them for an hour or so to soften the root system and loosen it from the pot if the roots have grown onto the pot. Use a dull knife to gently cut between the pot and the plant to remove the roots. When done carefully, it is possible to remove roots without causing harm to the plant at all. Use a hose to remove all loose media and then gently remove by hand any that remains. Cut off any damaged or rotted roots and then trim the live roots to encourage them to grow after mounting. I always then soak my plants in Physan or Consan for at least five minutes to reduce the chance of bacteria and fungus entering the plant.

Spread the moss on the mounting, arrange the roots over the moss and then use six to ten pound fishing line (monofilament) to tie the orchid to the mount. Fishing line is widely used because it can be left on the mount since it does not biodegrade and is nearly invisible. You want to mount the plant well enough to keep it in place on your material, but not so tightly that you are cutting the roots or the plant with the line. Another idea is to use old panty hose to attach the plant to the mount. Once the orchid is well attached, the panty hose can be removed. This is a good option in addition to the fishing line so that some extra moss can be used to cover the outside of the roots while the plant is getting established.

Keep the orchid in a somewhat shady spot for a couple of weeks and spray sparingly until you see new roots growing and then move it to the location where you will be growing it. It is virtually impossible to overwater mounted plants, so if you like to baby them mounting is a good way to grow. During hot weather, however, it vitally important to water every day or the plants will not fare well.

AOS Corner

The American Orchid Society is busy with its Fall 2009 meetings in California, the winter show season and then we're right in to planning for the spring meetings in Oklahoma City in April 2010. These meetings and shows are a great opportunity to find the best orchids as well as make friends with people who have similar interests to yours. You do not have to be a member to attend any of the shows although being a member and helping with the show makes it a richer experience. You can find all of the details on shows and meetings in Orchids magazine or at our web site www.aos.org and then you can put it on your calendar so you won't miss any of the fun. While you are at the calendar and you see the holidays coming up, consider purchasing an orchid calendar, an AOS pin or an AOS membership as a gift for yourself or an orchid lover. You can get any of those off the web site or by calling 561-404-2000 and then you'll have that gift out of the way. If you are an AOS member you have free and discounted admission to more than 200 botanical gardens and arboreta - now that is a benefit many people are not aware of. Go to the "join" page of the web site to see the details of this offer. So you can buy someone an AOS membership and then expect them to take you to a garden for the day! Celebrate fall by going to an orchid show.
